ISD looks forward to this GALA EVENT. Updates will appear in future CB's.

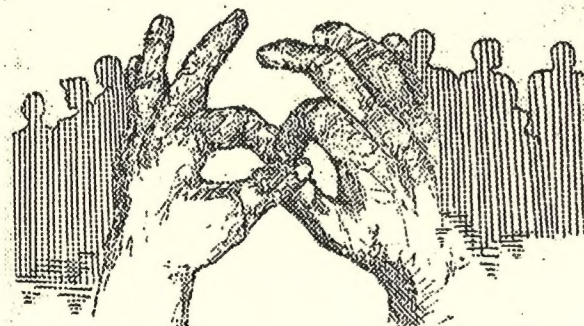

Whoops

The first Transition Workshop will be on February 4 not on January 28 as written in last week's Campus Bulletin. If you have signed up for a workshop on the 28th, we will change that to February 4 automatically. If you cannot attend the workshop on February 4, please contact Mary Alice Moon. Sorry for the inconvenience!

Last week's Campus Bulletin featured an article about the LRC Retreat. Carol Wild's name was omitted on the list of those people attending the retreat. The CB regrets this error.

Mental Health Advisory Council Meets

On Tuesday, January 11, the Mental Health Advisory Council for Deaf and Hard of Hearing People in Indiana met at ISD. ISD's Mental Health Counselor, Jodee Crace is a member of the council. The group of about twenty-five representatives from around the state covered a variety of issues related to mental health of Deaf and Hard of Hearing people.

Thanks

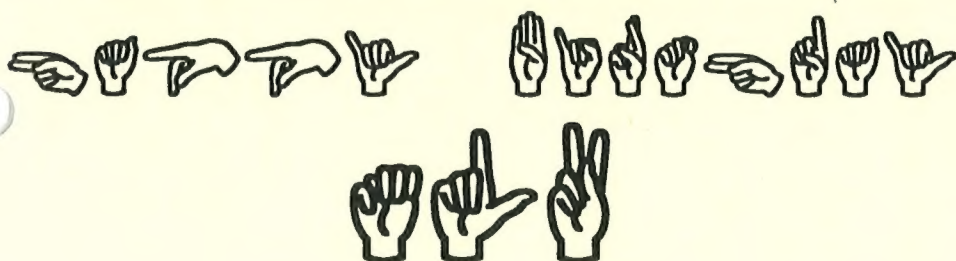

The Indiana Sports Corporation (ISC) has donated videotape to ISD which will be used to document the Bibi conference being hosted by ISD in April of 1994.

Mr. and Mrs. David Swider have donated $50 to ISD. The couple requested that their contribution be added to the school's Letterman Fund.

ISD appreciates the generosity of both the ISC and the Swiders!

A Note From Bill Coffey

Cherie, Jordan, Taylor and I would like to send our love and thanks to the many friends who have shown us so much support through cards, letters, calls, visits, plants, flowers, books, balloons, pies, cakes, candies, home-delivered food, dogsitting, house-cleaning, music, tapes, hand-holdings, hugs and kisses (whew!) during my recent surgeries. Your friendship is priceless!

2nd Annual Special Olympics

ISD's adapted physical education classes held their second annual Special Olympics on December 14. The event featured eighteen stations (including jumping rope, walking a balance beam, and basketball shooting) designed to test individual skills. A total of twenty-four K - 5, middle and high school students participated. All received gold victory medals on red, white and blue ribbons. Teachers and high school students judged the participants performances. The games concluded with special cookies and juice courtesy of Brown Cafeteria.

The following article, by ISD Transition Consultant Ann Titus, originally appeared in the November issue of Indiana Parent Magazine, a monthly parent service publication for Northern Indiana.

In the 1960's anthropologists at Gallaudet University in Washington, D.C. began to study the signs that Deaf staff and students used to communicate with each other. Their research proved that these signs were actually a language, having its own grammar and lexicon. This language has come to be known as American Sign Language and its recognition led to the study of other sign languages around the world.

These events of the 1960's had major impact on how hearing people view Deaf people. Anthropologists and linguists began to consider Deaf people as a cultural and linguistic minority, having their own traditions, behaviors, values, and language. Prior to that time, Deaf people were thought of as handicapped or disabled. This new cultural view was more consistent with what Deaf people had always known about themselves: they had their own "Deaf Way."

From 1880 until the 1960's Deaf children were not allowed to use signs in the classrooms. Schools for the Deaf around the country had followed the disability or medical view of Deaf people. Students were expected to learn by lipreading the teacher. During the 1960's many schools began to permit the use of signs, however, they did not use the sign language used by the Deaf community. Rather, educators took individual signs from American Sign Language and mapped those signs onto English grammar, signing and speaking simultaneously.

The recognition of American Sign Language and Deaf Culture is now changing the nature of Deaf education. The Indiana School for the Deaf is leading the country in this change. The Deaf School, located behind the State Fairgrounds in Indianapolis, is changing its program to reflect this cultural and linguistic view. They call their new philosophy "bilingual and bicultural education."

In a bilingual and bicultural school, students can learn any subject in the language of the Deaf. Classroom instruction and discussion is carried out in American Sign Language. Students learn to read and write English as their second language. Classes are also provided to students who indicate the ability or desire to learn to speak English. Thus, the program is "bilingual."

A bilingual and bicultural school reviews and revises all curriculum so that all areas of study reflect Deaf culture and the Deaf world view. Curriculum will also encourage understanding, respect, and the ability to successfully participate in the more general Hearing culture. Becoming "bicultural" means having a strong sense of identity while respecting diversity.

This idea of bilingualism and biculturalism is not new. The Superintendent at the Deaf School, Eddy F. Laird, explains that "ISD is carrying on the legacy of the first educator of the Deaf in the United States, Laurent Clerc. In the early 1800's Clerc used the language of the students to instruct them while also teaching them to read and write English. The Indiana Deaf School has even more historical connections to Clerc: one of Clerc's students, William Willard, founded ISD in 1843.

Bilingual and bicultural education for Deaf students does seem like a new idea for staff, especially those who are learning American Sign Language for the first time. As might be expected, a philosophical change does not take place overnight. Rather, letting go of the medical view of Deaf people and embracing the cultural and linguistic view is an arduous, ongoing task. The Indiana Deaf School has targeted the year 2000 for full implementation of the philosophy.

SCHOOL AMONG FINEST IN NATION

To the Editor of The News:

I am writing in response to a Nov. 15 article in The News titled, "Boy, 9, lives in both the hearing and deaf worlds."

The family interviewed in that article made several statements about the Indiana School for the Deaf that are simply not true. For example, they were quoted as saying the deaf school places too much emphasis on deaf culture and neglects teaching their son speech and English grammar. They also were quoted as saying that the deaf school prohibited their son from speaking most of the time.

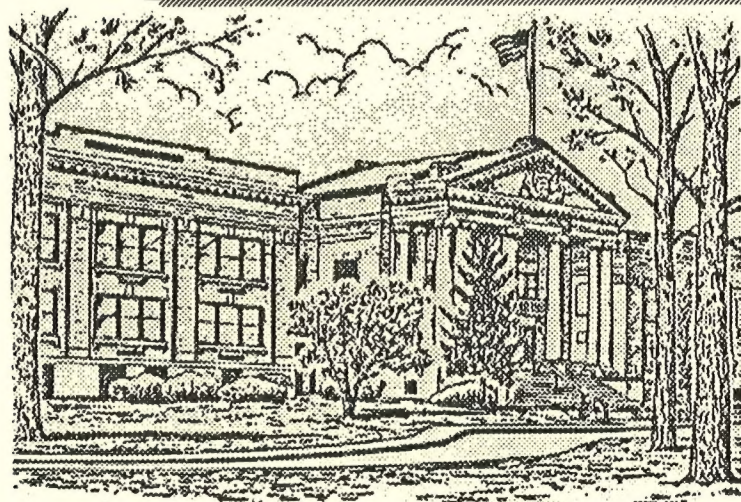

My daughter attends the deaf school. She not only is being taught speech (spoken English) and English grammar, but she also is being instructed in her own language and the language of deaf people in this country, the American Sign Language or ASL. The Indiana School for the Deaf approaches English as a second language and focuses all instruction, including reading and writing of English, through ASL.

Not only are the students at ISD learning English through ASL, but they also are involved in learning about the culture and history of the deaf and how to compare and contrast it to that of hearing cultures. This is called bi-lingual/bi-cultural education. My daughter and the other students at ISD have so many opportunities that are not available through a mainstream or inclusionary program. They are able to have deaf role models. They are able to see deaf and hearing teachers and staff members working together. They have deaf peers. They are able to understand conversations in the classrooms, in the halls, at recess and in the lunchroom without having to rely upon an interpreter.

The students at the deaf school are able to fully participate in sports and extracurricular activities without being labeled as different. My daughter and the other students lead very normal lives.

The Indiana School for the Deaf is a leading school in the nation in the field of deaf education. I think Indianapolis should be proud of this school. I know I am.
